

An abstract painting by Paul Balmer, featuring a textured surface with visible brushstrokes. The color palette is dominated by warm, earthy tones of ochre, yellow, and brown, interspersed with cooler shades of grey, blue, and green. The composition is layered, with darker, more saturated areas in the center and lighter, more textured areas towards the top and bottom. The overall effect is one of dynamic energy and organic form.

LANDSCAPE

Paul Balmer is a contemporary landscape painter known for his evocative and moody depictions of the countryside. Paul's use of adding and subtracting layers, making richly textured fields, gives his paintings a sense of depth and atmosphere. Overall, his paintings capture the rugged beauty of the natural world, while also exploring themes of memory, emotion, and the passing of time. This series of paintings is inspired by the many places he has lived, South Africa, Australia, Europe and the U.S.
